RIVERSIDE HOTEL.

NEW HOTEL AT RIVERSIDE.

An elegantly appointed Hotel from designs prepared by W. L. B. JENNEY, Esq., is in progress of construction at Riverside, to be completed on or before July 1. It is so arranged that—with the REFECTORY, for culinary and dining purposes, and the PAVILION, for billiards and lounging, both 300 feet removed from this main building, though connected by a covered verandah—it will afford families the quiet and comfort so much desired, and nowhere else attainable.

The rooms are all large, light, and well ventilated; 12 trains each way per day between Chicago and Riverside; commutation, $20 per quarter, and family tickets at 14c. per ride; 11 miles of splendid drives; good facilities for boating, fishing, billiards, &c., affording business men recreation in the society of their families without interfering with business.

Rooms for the season may now be engaged from the plans, which may be seen at my office, 23 Washington-st. Occupation to be given July 1 next.

H. M. KINSLEY, Proprietor.

RIVERSIDE.

RIVERSIDE TIME TABLE.

The improvements of Riverside COMPLETED, affording a drive of over seven miles of walks for the pleasure of the residents and visitors. Excursion Tickets to Riverside and return, can be obtained at the Ticket Office of the Railroad Company, 63 South Clark-st., or at the Union Depot, foot of La Salle-st.

The improvements at Riverside consist of well built roads and walks, perfected system of drainage, water-works, and ornamented parks of several hundred acres. Lots of 100 feet front by about 250 feet deep, will be sold on easy terms at $4,000, and WITHOUT ASSESSMENT OR TAX UPON PURCHASERS FOR THE IMPROVEMENTS.

Homes are obtainable at Riverside where the charge for IMPROVEMENTAL ASSESSMENTS IS UNKNOWN, A CONSIDERATION OF VITAL IMPORTANCE, WHICH HAS BECOME EXTREMELY ONEROUS IN EVERY OTHER LOCALITY IN THIS COUNTY.

Financial arrangements with the Company can be made by parties of moderate means, whereby they can secure the erection of their homes without much immediate cash outlay, and the rapid increase in value of the property at Riverside will render it far more economical than paying city rents.

BRAND'S TEMPLE OF ART.

Nine Years Ago Hawthorne Said:

"To the artists determined to make my look remarkable, I say as old Ad Sinnett: Have the right sort of a frame, and the right sort of a picture, and the right sort of a light, and the right sort of a position, and the right sort of a price, and the right sort of a puff, and then success is certain."

A GILLIES PHOTOGRAPH is the only exact counterpart of the face, thereby removing all doubt as to its correctness. SUNDAY, MAY 7, 1871.

ENGLAND'S MUCH NAME.

The enormous wealth of the capitalist classes of Great Britain almost excites belief or incredulity. The London Economist, which is entitled to the best financial authority in Great Britain, estimates the amount of foreign and colonial stocks owned in that country at two thousand eight hundred and fifty millions of dollars ($2,850,000,000), and that these stocks pay the holders from 6 to 7 per cent interest. Call the interest 6½ per cent, and the annual income of the enormous fortune of Great Britain, derived from the people of other countries, amounts to the immense sum of one hundred and eighty-five millions of dollars in gold ($185,250,000), which exceeds by seventy-four millions the present interest on the debt of the United States, and by sixty millions the interest on the national debt of Great Britain.

The interest on these stocks is, for most part, reinvested in more bonds in the country which issued them. The money is, therefore, in effect, drawing compound interest. A year's interest more than next year about $12,000,000, and so on, ever increasing both principal and interest, and doubling the whole amount once in about ten or eleven years.

The foreigners who thinly dot these foreign stocks are purchased at an average not exceeding 90 per cent of their face. Consequently, they pay the holders but $2,570,000,000 on which they receive $180,250,000 per annum of interest, or about 7¼ per cent, on their money. What proportion of these stocks come from the United States we have no means of ascertaining. At a rough guess, we would say that not far from $1,000,000,000 of American corporate indebtedness is owned in Great Britain.

The London Times estimates the amount of foreign stocks arrived in Great Britain considerably higher than does the Economist, supplies the data to show that one hundred thousand pounds sterling was loaned abroad during the year 1870, which includes reinvestment of interest and profits on stocks. The Times asserts that more than eight hundred millions of pounds sterling of foreign stocks were held in that kingdom at the close of 1870. It claims that the amount placed at interest in foreign countries and the colonies exceeds the principal of the British debt, which is something less than eight hundred millions. And, at the average rate of 07 per cent, the income derived from this foreign investment is 5 per cent more than double the interest paid on that debt. In other words, the interest on the foreign loans of British capitalists is sufficient, not only to pay the interest on the national debt of Great Britain, but to pay $7 50 per annum in gold, for every inhabitant in England, Scotland, and Wales. (As Ireland has no money invested in foreign stocks, she, of course, comes in for any share in the fund.) Estimating the future annual investments of Great Britain, in foreign, national, State, provincial, municipal, and railway stocks, at the amount stated by the London Times, for the year 1870, viz., $600,000,000—the to include the investment of interest and dividends on purchases—at the end of this century Great Britain will be the creditor of the world to the amount of £4,000,000,000, or $20,000,000,000,—a sum equal to the present cash value of the whole real and personal property of the American Republic. At 6 per cent interest she will draw the comfortable sum of $1,200,000,000 of annual interest, or equal to half the present American national debt.

As the population of Great Britain increases only about 1 per cent a year, she will contain at the end of this century something like 30,000,000 inhabitants. The interest on her foreign stocks divided among this number would be $40 per head, or, say, $200 per family, which is amply sufficient to breed and meet the whole population, and supply every person with a suit of clothing. Large and improbable as the gain we have stated may seem, it is less than the reverse sentiment, as stated by the Economist, would swell to at compound interest. If not another dollar of English capital shall be invested in foreign bonds, but the holders shall content themselves with reinvesting the interest as fast as it accrues, before the year 1900 the sum due them will exceed twenty thousand millions of dollars, or eight times the amount of the American national debt. These figures show the power of capital, invested at compound interest, to multiply itself at an ever accelerated ratio. They also show what a prodigious start Great Britain got when she abolished her protective system, some twenty-five years ago, and adopted that of unrestricted trade with all nations, regardless of the chains and burdens they might in their folly impose on their own commerce and industry. Twenty-five years ago Great Britain had scarcely a dollar invested in foreign securities, for the reason that her people had no capital to spare. Behold what has been accomplished under the system of unshackled trade! When will this country profit by her example?

PRIESTS AND MINISTERS.

It seems to be a peculiarity of the theological faculty, or instinct, to insist on dividing all men, whatever their diversities, into two classes—just two, and no more. Indeed, there is a certain sort of heterodoxy in suggesting to the dogmatist that there may be three, ten, or a hundred roots of virtue or a religious question. He declares that all men shall be either sheep or goats, Methodists or sinners, Catholic or pagan, Presbyterian or Low Church, Evangelical or Latitudinarian, saved or lost. It is idle, wright or wrong, the assumptions of the pedagogue, one of the leading features of the theological spectrum that is, roughly, though very dimly, divided into seven. Between these lines of light we have a [illegible] of music, the subdued [illegible] of moral harmony and [illegible] throughout the universe, and the whole range of man's relation to both [illegible] Creator, and of man's conscience and Creator, and of man's conscience and Creator, and of man's conscience and Another General Revolution Imminent in Mexico.

FRANCE.

FORTS ISSY AND VANVES.

PARIS, May 6.—The forces of the Commune have occupied the Fort of Issy. The Communists declare that Fort Vanves is still theirs, and that troops have entered for barracks on the suburbs of Gravelliers and Becourt.

AN ASSAULT.

PARIS, May 7.—The Commune has been defeated by another of its members.

General Bossel, in his operations against Versailles, avoids all contact with forts of property.

A NATIONAL VESSEL.

VERSAILLES, May 6.—At noon to-day there was a short engagement in the trenches in front of Forts Issy and Vanves. The Communists were repulsed, by assault, a small redoubt defended by a force of Gendarmes, who were, however, overpowered. The work was, however, evacuated by the Versailles, in consequence of its exposure to Fort Vanves.

RETURNED TO THE COMMUNE.

PARIS, May 6.—The Commune has appointed the following persons to fill the vacancies in the Council: Pyat, Delescluze, Rochefort, Felix Pyat, Paris Journal, Pyat, and Trinqui.

ANOTHER DECREE.

A decree issued by the Commune of Public Safety vests in Gustave Bossel the honorary dignity of military superior. The decree, it is said, has also given an order for the demolition of the Vendome Column, Chapel of Expiation, Chapel of Louis XVI., and the house of the Rue Chaussee d'Antin, and, in an order of the day, appoints Commissioners to the execution of the right wing, La Caisse of the centre, Rittenhouse of the left wing, and Dupont and Rabe of the reserve. Passports at arbitrary requests, but as yet without success.

FIRE VISIBLE.

PARIS, May 8.—Several officers of the Versailles army of Fort Vanves have informed the Communists that the trenches are restored for gunners to man, and that artillery will be placed there.

ABSOLUTE SILENCE.

The Commune of Issy has issued a decree that the trenches are restored for gunners to man, and that artillery will be placed there.

THE PURSUED AND PURSUERS.

NEW YORK, May 8.—A special Versailles dispatch says the Fifty-second Regiment, Minister of Finance, have started to meet Bossel at Orleans. It is thought the cause of the Communists is hopeless. The Versailles army is now within two days' march of Paris. The work in the German batteries has begun. It is said that on Monday, the Prussians will withdraw from Versailles, and on Tuesday, the Prussians will be in Paris. Every hope is gone in extinguishing the revolt, but it is probable that the Prussians will bring back the troops if they desire.

THE SKIRMISH.

There was no fighting yesterday, but it will break from Montretout to-morrow. It is believed that the Communists will attack Fort Issy to-night. The troops are in excellent condition.

ANOTHER DESPERATE SKIRMISH.

Special Dispatch to the New York World.

PARIS, May 6.—Another skirmish occurred at 5.30, but it was of a desperate character. A force of 2,000 men, with 6 guns, issued from the Porte d'Issy. The Communists were repulsed with great loss. The Versailles troops were then ordered to advance, and they opened fire against Fort Vanves.

ANOTHER SKIRMISH BY THE COMMUNE.

PARIS, May 6.—The Commune has suppressed the following journals: Le Figaro, Le Petit Moniteur, Le Soir Journal, Petit Prince, Petit Journal, Prince, and Temps.

PRIVATE MUSICAL ENTERTAINMENTS.

They are trying to set the Fashion here; at private musical entertainments, of giving pure classical instrumental music, and having no singing. It is an excellent thing to do; you go to them, and only give them private, with people, and only give them music, and instrumental music,--the majority not understanding or appreciating it the least, but, because it is the fashion, saying, "How charming!" "How very grand!" since Easter there has been a constant succession of private musicals and evening concerts. Mrs. Parke H. Jones had a large morning concert, and Mrs. George Strong an evening musical. Dr. Ward, who has a very elegant residence on Forty-seventh street, to which is attached a large conservatory, always, after Easter, throws open his house for two weeks for charity entertainments. It is a most beautifully-arranged house for entertainments of this kind, there being four large rooms, and a square hall, all opening into the conservatory. Five hundred tickets are sold for these occasions, and three dollars is always the price, and the receipts are usually six thousand dollars during the two weeks. One of the most successful took place on Saturday evening last. The proceeds were divided between the Infant Asylum, Inebriety, Blind Asylum, and the Gottschalk statue to be placed in Central Park. It was a most brilliant and fashionable affair. Mrs. Gallagher, Miss Hinchman, and Mr. Leoni were the great attractions. Dr. Ward is quite a musician himself, having composed several little operettas. Mrs. Gallagher sang for the masses at other charities this spring, at the Union League Theatre and Chickering's,--the farce about her and Mr. Leoni, who has the most delicious of funny voices, being very great in the musical scene.

THEATRICAL MATTERS.

Daly, at the Fifth Avenue Theatre, has made a great hit with Charles Mathews. It is really refreshing to see such an actor, when, in the present dearth of talent in this country, opens fought and other absurdities are exploded, and he is left to stand or fall by his own merits. The house has been filled nightly with the most fashionable and cultivated audiences, and Mathews has received the most flattering encomiums from the press. Mathews is to be the great attraction of Daly's season, and Mathews is to be the great attraction of Daly's season, and Mathews is to be the great attraction of Daly's season, and

"PRIVATE MUSICAL ENTERTAINMENTS."

They are trying to oof the fashion here, at private musicales, by giving private musical entertainments, and boring you to death. It is an absurdity to fill your house with people, and only give them room to sit down. The other night, Dan Setchell, who is a capital mimic, was entertaining a party of us with a description of Shakspeare's "Othello" as rendered by Edwin Booth. Dan's description was worth a dozen Booths, but he was called upon to sing, and then to recite, and then to sing again, and after Yankee, threw open his house for two successive evenings for entertainments. It is a week for charity entertainments. Another magnificently-arranged house for entertainments of this kind, there being four brave rooms, and a square hall, all opening into the rooms, and a square hall, all opening into the street-door, one hundred dollars is aimed at for these occasions, and three dollars is always the price. There are usually six entertainers given during the two weeks. One of the most successful took place on Saturday evening last. The proceeds were divided between the Industrial School of Arkansas and the Children's Aid Society. Falstaff is to be given in Central Park. It was a most brilliant assemblage of fashionable and intellectual audience. Mrs. Gilsgar, Miss Stirling, and Mr. Leonard were the principal attractions. Mr. Ward is quite a musician himself, having composed several little operettas. Mrs. Gilsgar has sung for nearly every other charity in the city, and Miss Stirling, one hundred dollars is always the price. There are usually six entertainers given during the two weeks. THEATRICAL MATTERS.

Daly, at the Fifth Avenue Theatre, has made a great hit with Charles Mathews. It is really refreshing to see such an actor, which, in the whole history of the London and New York stage, is length and other absurdities are encroaching hugely upon the old-fashioned drama. The New York Herald, filled mainly with the most unfortunate and contrived advertisements, has [illegible] Mr. Lou Sarr is manager of [illegible]

A good [illegible] thing is seeming has been made at Niblo's by an Englishman, of the name of Hill—Arthur Hill, I believe, in imitating certain of the best-paid giving chances for great display. These are Miss Minnie Palmer, a pretty child of [illegible] years old, but who all produced with marvellous ability. In the dressing, the managers have given the most extraordinary attention to the costumes of Grimm. In the very interest on the stage. The costumes have been designed by Worth, the most fashionable dressmaker in the city. Augusta Foster has been engaged for her service in the last. In the fourth act, a theatre where Grimm is supposed to be playing before Elizabeth and the Duchess of York, the picture is, without doubt, the most magnificent ever seen on the stage. Ribbonism in Ireland.

Report to a Committee of the House of Commons.

Extraordinary Revelations of Irish Sub-Rosaism.

[Special Cable and Correspondence.]

LONDON, Sept 28.

At last we have in detail the disclosures which have been made before a committee of the House of Commons of the deeds of the Ribbonmen in Westmeath. For the information of Parliament and the country, the evidence given by magistrates and other residents in the district concerned, is now printed, and a copy of it has 19-day come into my hands. A perusal of the statements leaves on the mind a vivid impression of the reign of terror which prevails in the district named. There are in all over 200 separate depositions, and it is difficult to light upon just those which are most illustrative of the condition of things; but I will supply you with enough to make you pity the people who have to deal with the evil.

Captain George Talbot, a resident Magistrate for eighteen years, declared that he would hardly go anybody to prosecute a Ribbonman, and in evidence of an aggravated nature. They were afraid of being beaten. A carpenter had a dispute, and was brutally murdered by six or seven men, who beat out his brains on the roadside with a stick. No one would give evidence, but the passage money of all the murderers to America was paid by the neighbors. At the coroner's inquest, held under hearing, the court was attended by middle-class farmers—the same in every case—who were Ribbonmen, watching the proceedings. One man who was to give evidence before he died, to Himself the watcher who dealt him the fatal blow, although he knew them by name. The murderer was brought from a neighboring county; they were entertained during the night with drink and provisions; during the night they were hidden in a straw-shed outside the house, and they were guilded across the bog, to where the carriage was, in two parties, so as not to attract the attention of the police. They reached the station in time to take in the factions, which the time was nearing his core. They put him in the train, and he was seen no more. They saw him in the legs, so as to disable him. And it was of those wounds that he subsequently died.

Mr. Featherstone Hough, for raising the rent of a cottage, was shot while riding on his car, at his own hat-dred yards of a house. His son-in-law got out of the dog-cart, and went with the hounds to see what was the matter, but they refused at first to open the door. At last a woman came out, and subsequently the nervous friends allowed to give the coach-man any assistance whatever, and denied all knowledge of the murder. Not surprisingly, the doctor of the family refused to drive on to another house. His son-in-law was lying across the dog-cart, and the horse was bleeding to death. Then the coachman bowed, and was driven off, refused subscriptions, and he sailed subsequently as a third horse, and, being still refused, he drove home to the residence into the yard, when he found that his master was dead. The coachman declared that he was aware of the consequences—knew that he was to be shot, and who were to be the shooters. Mr. Hough's son-in-law, Captain Talbot, "the bentley at the hotel where he tar-nat put up, who lived in the house with the murdered man's wife, was aware that he was to be shot, and that very night on his way home."

Could it be correct to say that all freedom of action is at this moment at an end in Westmeath? Apparently it is.

So that between bayonets and rollers, masters and servants, employers and employed, and—Another difficulty, parties are not free agents to act as they think.

If those that apply to the town as well as to the country? Answer—To all parts of the district.

Whether Magistrates had cause to charge are, at the present moment, at variance in his district and under protection? The particulars are in-struct-ive:

What number of people in your district are under protection? There are six parties under protection.

What kind of protection? Two policemen are constantly with them. One gentleman has two policemen at a standing fast. A second party has two policemen in his house, and also with him; and a third party has a police-man with him; and a widow lady has also two policemen in her house and with her. The next is the case of a farmer of Pulsonne had been most commonly well, and grossomined parties also who had two policemen over since the prosecution.

What was the prosecution for? There had been a man, gotten in the night, and cutting the throats of his cattle, and ordering them parties to leave the farm on pain of death.

Then there is the case of a gentleman, which mak-s the sixth case, where the cattle have been houghed with him, when the cattle were houghed, and there have been some very small fires who have been recently threatened, who hold six or seven farms, and they and their families are continually watched by the police.

In their houses? No; they have a constable sleeping by day and night in the house to protect them.

If they went to some distance from their homes, would they give notice to the police, I suppose? If they were going to a distance, they would give notice to the police, and the police knew that they would be back at such an hour, and the police would probably go with them.

A gentleman, who described various crimes committed in Mullingar, was asked whether he could have given evidence. So: he was satisfied that if 1,000 police were quartered there for the next 100 years they would not get it. As certainly as they did, so certainly would they meet punishment sooner or later, short or long delay, by having their houses burnt. They are in greater fear of the vengeance of the Ribbonmen than they are of hanging.

The Chairman of the principal railway company in Ireland detailed numerous cases of outrages of the kind, firing at the trains, &c., arising from a dismissal of the servants of the company.

In making fresh appointments, was observed a number of applicants? Yes; he observed whether your action would be agreeable or disagreeable to the Ribbonmen? Certainly regarded. "I am not exactly sure whether that is so, but I am quite sure that a distinction is made in regard to the persons selected in pleasing to the district.

Some time ago a Ribbon notice was found by a policeman pasted one mile from Mullingar, at 11 o'clock p. m., stating that the Ribbonmen had met at Rochfort, and that 1,000 wanted in his left hand. The Rev. Mr. Crofton, of Louth, about a month ago, received a notice ordering a notorious Ribbon leader, who had been refused to pay an increased rent, to be put to death. He was told that the notice to one could be found to serve the ajustment notice. Water at last was brought to the house. Water at last was brought to the landlord of proof that the notice was served, and that the party was determined to come on. Some persons, retain his farm six months longer. It is believed that the crime was prevented by the timely visit of the Chief and the directions of the Ribbon committee. The reverend gentleman was examined at length on this point. He himself had been obliged to serve the notice on the landlord. He could not get it served by the police. Westmeath is governed by Duffy and a police, and I was obliged to turn pro-secutor myself myself, and I found that the police would not grant protection from the police to the house. I could not find no one that would serve the notice. I nailed it on the outside door and upon the chapel door, and house door."

A farm became vacant through the inability of the tenant (who went to America) to pay for want of stock. Several persons came to look at it, and as every person walked the farm he received a notice to quit, threatening letter. All were afraid to take it. Could the epelds have opened as in life, I am sure that I should have locked into eyes of that rare and exceptional class that have despise by their contempt. Their faces, that bear stud, and roward the gazer by disclosing the thousand unuttered, and, perhaps, unutterable thoughts, fastened on the countenance of the Irish woman—the woman of sensibility and soul from the more woman of sense and heart. Though susceptible to beauty, it was, after all, the expression of the countenance that secured the real charm. Her emotional nature that most pleased me then, and left the impress that will never fade. It is more than possible, indeed, that it was not entirely a fault. I grant you that the features were not of perfect regularity, but then, as now, give me the feeling face before all that of mere beauty—and you think we are all of one mind in this respect—of us, whatever our nations or tongues may say. But alas! the fair sex has asserted but one language, that of our eyes—that which are offtimes the most arrant liars, in or out of the realm of nature. Not to wander, I am also of the opinion that my heroine, with all my disparagement, would have been quite as pretty in death as in life—she must have been, or she could not have maintained her dignities one moment. I can only account for her promised beauty in the manner by supposing that the rich blood of health may have given a color and something of a fullness to lip and cheek, and chin, that passed for boyish beauty. Read from the pallor of death and the last drop of blood, there was left the paleness, the delicate distinctness, and much of the loveliness of the female face done into Parian.

Then, then, to the life, I was enamored of my self, but now the masquerade was ended, and she was herself again.

But all my study of the face failed to reveal the slightest mystery that hung about her. Her pockets, if she had any, I searched the pockets for some letter or indication of her real or assumed name, her residence or direction, but absolutely there was nothing of the kind to be found. Guilt set in this, I looked for no bouquet, but this was not to be seen. Finding my vain search, I went to take a farewell look, when it occurred to me that I might put in view, I was turning to seek aid in digging her a grave, when the sense of my peril, for the second time, struck me with such force that, feeling the necessity of making one hasty double cure, I beat down and placing the scene by her side, I crossed the stile, unheeded her soldier shirt, and there lay exposed in my view two as fair and perfect female breasts as ever the sculptor of Eve ever rejoiced in. And yet not perfect, for through one of them had been the cruel bullet that had robbed her of her young life. Re-Castaneda child and dust, I shall see in my sense and carried her still further into the shade of the wood, and then hastened to my regiment, where I got a detail of men, with three tools and directed them to dig a grave on the spot I had first seen her. When this was done the bottom was covered with shavings from the battle-field, a pillow was formed of the knapsack, and still another constituted the pall which I wrapped around her, as I bore her form to the grave. The men, believing my story that I was the lover of a favored officer, showed much sympathy in the matter, and, after the ceremonies, placed it carefully in its resting-place, and covered it with branches, before filling in the earth. When they had finished all their skill in perfecting the mound, we left her to her last sleep, where the sunshine and the trees would dispose the evenings of enchanting light or shade on her grave, and where, day after day, the birds would sing her requiem.

Within a few hours after this I was under the terrible artillery fire that your friends burned of from the crest of Malvern Hill and the gunboats on the James. Momentarily death seemed certain, and I am sure that, if there had perished, my last thought of earth would have been that fair, girlish face. From that time till we fased your Sheridan at Five Forks, in camp and march, in many a night watch, on battle field and in rest-pen, many the pain to the one dressed in blue, seated at the left."

"Valentine Duval? I am not astonished at such judgment coming from a dilettante as your self," said the Count, "and, had I the apple to offer, I should, in order to be just, divide it."

"Oh, now you are becoming gallant!"

"No; but really considering the question only in a personal point of view, I would give the palm to the one dressed in blue, seated at the left."

"Captain," said I, "I thank you heartily for your story, but query, what does Mrs. Captain say to all this?"

"Nothing, for she knows nothing of it, and if I should tell it to her as earnestly as I have to you, she would say that I was more in love with a dead girl than I ever was with her, and she would be very wrong—of course."

And scholing with the Captain, "Who was she?" we parted for the day.

Heterodoxy.

Pray then, put me dermens si—ver my soul no more with creeds,
They are only stones and bones to my hungry spirit's pieces—
I am tired of starving souls, with their vain mastery,
Loving clergy, hards no terror but the fear of losing Heaven.

In a Roman quest from thee, could my exiled eye
Only [illegible] the signin' song, blessing thence thy tender vows!
What is this Papists to fair and gallant if I waked them seeking them!

What to me would be the joys of that bright and
Yet among them I should lack evermore thy loving hand!
What to me the pastures green where thy footsoots
What the paths beside still waters if thou walkest not with me!

Ah, sweet love! after death my still faithful soul may dwell,
Satan may call it bliss or woe—they may name it
heaven or hell,
By thee only, oh, beloved, will my joy or pain be wrought,
I shall find my heaven beside thee, or in hell
Thou art not!

Beards in the British Army and Navy.

The English volunteer establishment, if it has done nothing else, has metamorphosed the appearance of British male subjects all the world over, and through the whole male population of many other lands. Twenty-five years ago, to walk down a London street with a beard on your face was to be a marked man, and to be followed by a crowd of boys. Now such a beard would have required, on the part of most men, a great deal of courage.

Moustaches, too, have become very much an appendage. Mr. Mundy, an eminent Birmingham manufacturer, being a member of the House of Commons, which became famous for his beard. But when volunteering became the fashion, moustaches, and, finally, beards, sprung up everywhere, sir.

Frowned down with contempt by the Duke of Wellington, that proved the principle of wearing them exclusively to the cavalry, though why you should confine the use to the cavalry, though why you should confine the use to the cavalry, though why you should confine the use
